STATEN ISLAND'S THREE HIGHER EDUCATION INSTITUTIONS ARE PROUD TO INTRODUCE PART 1 OF THE SUCCESSFUL DEPASS GRANT WRITING SERIES TO FACULTY AND ADMINISTRATORS WHOSE RESEARCH AND PROGRAMS ADVANCE COLLEGE READINESS, COMPLETION, AND EQUITY ON STATEN ISLAND.

PART 1

The Art of Successful Grantsmanship
What You Need To Know Before You Write

PRESENTED BY

Anthony L. DePass, PhD

The development of successful grant proposals has become more difficult in recent years due to increased competition for ever tightening funding lines. It is no longer sufficient to just have a good or even great idea. The presentation of the idea is critical for its survival through very critical review processes that often vary between agencies and organizations. This introductory workshop is aimed at training faculty and administrators from all disciplines in strategies for producing successful grants.

INSTRUCTION WILL INCLUDE

- ✓ Strategies for professional engagement with the funding communities.
- ✓ Navigating appropriate funding support mechanisms (federal, state, local, professional societies, and private foundations).
- ✓ Strategic planning for personal, professional, and institutional development and related funding.
- ✓ Understanding the proposal review systems for government and private agencies, and how they inform proposal development and structure.
- ✓ Developing appropriate and measurable objectives (professional, institutional etc.).
- ✓ Strategies (pre and post submission) that maximize the chances of success in funding.

Prior grant-writing experience is not required but the outline of an idea for funding in the form of a short abstract is advised to enhance active participation and to gain maximal benefit.

- ✓ Light refreshments will be served
- ✓ Opportunity to apply to participate in the full DePass Grant Writing Series

Please see description of full series and your campus point of contact on page 2

GRANT WRITING WORKSHOP SERIES

This series of interactive workshops will engage and train faculty and staff at your institution in the development of competitive grant proposals. This model is in contrast to the traditionally didactic “singular infusion” formats that excite attendees but fail to effectively impart the necessary skills to independently develop a successful grant proposal. We provide instruction and support from the pre- writing stages through grant development and submission. In addition, we incorporate instruction from institutional offices and resources (Sponsored Programs etc.), especially in sections that are relevant to the identification for institutional resources (library research services, writing centers etc.) and pre and post award administrative services.

Through this series of workshops, the grant-writing process is separated into manageable sections, each with measurable outcomes. In addition to interactive hands-on instruction on the development of their individual proposals, participants will have opportunities to be engaged in peer review that has been shown as a major factor in successful grantsmanship development and one of the leading predictors of grant funding.

The series begins with a 4-hour workshop on critical steps in professional development that will position the participant for professional success. Subsequent workshops develop and map a Specific Aims/Goals and Objectives section to other sections of the proposal (Significance/Introduction, Experimental/Program plan, Administration- budgets, evaluation etc.). Participants also learn a system of translating a core document into a full narrative and most importantly, each participant will have a COMPLETED PROPOSAL for submission at the end of the series of workshops.

Dr. Anthony DePass has over 20 years experience in the development, review and evaluation of externally funded projects. He has trained faculty at several institutions ranging from Research Intensive institutions to Community Colleges with this interactive multi-workshop based model. The outcomes support this model as being effective in longer-term engagement and eventual submission of competitive proposals.

PARTICIPATION IN THE FULL GRANT WRITING WORKSHOP SERIES IS LIMITED.
